Question 1—Document-Based Question

In what ways did African Americans shape the course and consequences of the Civil War?

Confine your answer to the years from 1861 to 1870.

The 8–9 Essay

- Articulates a clear, well-constructed thesis focusing on the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Effectively employs a significant number of documents to examine the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Provides substantial, relevant outside information taken from the period 1861 to 1870 concerning the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War.
- Clearly analyzes the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Is well organized and well written.
- May contain minor errors.

The 5–7 Essay

- Contains a thesis, which may be partially developed, addressing the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Satisfactorily employs a reasonable number of documents to examine the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Provides ample, relevant outside information from the period 1861 to 1870 concerning the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War.
- Analyzes to some extent the ways in which African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- May present an imbalanced treatment between the ways that African Americans shaped the course and consequences of the Civil War or the war and its aftermath.
- Has acceptable organization and writing.
- May contain errors that do not seriously detract from the essay.

The 2–4 Essay

- Presents a thesis that may be simplistic, confused, or undeveloped in addressing the ways in which African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870; or presents no thesis.
- Uses few documents concerning the ways that African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870.
- Includes little relevant outside information from the period 1861 to 1870 concerning the ways in which African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War.
- Has little analysis of the ways in which African Americans shaped both the course and consequences of the Civil War from 1861 to 1870; may treat only one part of the question.
- May be poorly organized and/or poorly written.
- May contain major errors.

The 0–1 Essay

- Lacks a thesis or restates the question.
- Refers to few, if any, of the documents.

Question 1 Time Line (continued)

1863	January 1	Washington, D.C.	Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation takes effect, freeing enslaved Africans in Confederate areas and encouraging Black enlistment in the Union army.
1863	March 30	Washington, D.C.	Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Regiment is mustered into the Union army.
1863	May 27	Louisiana	Black troops bravely advance under the command of Union general Nathaniel Banks but ultimately fail against deadly fire in the Battle of Port Hudson—the first major battle involving Black troops.
1863	July 1	Washington, D.C.	Union imposes the first military draft.
1863	July 13–16	New York City	Draft opponents riot in New York City, killing 105, destroying $2 million in property (including the Colored Orphan Asylum), and mutilating their victims. The riot ends when Union troops return from Battle of Gettysburg.
1863	July 18	South Carolina	Assault on Fort Wagner by the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts Regiment; the Fifty-fourth loses half its officers (including Robert Gould Shaw) and half its troops before being repulsed.
1864	April 12	Tennessee	Confederate general Nathan Bedford Forrest leads 2,500 men against Fort Pillow, which was held by 292 Black soldiers and 285 White soldiers. As Blacks surrender, Confederates indiscriminately shoot and bayonet men, women, and children. In all, 200 Black people are killed.
1864	June 15	Washington, D.C.	Congress grants equal pay for all Black soldiers who were free when the Civil War began.
1864	September 29	Virginia	The Black division of the Eighteenth Corps heroically charges up the slopes against Confederate troops in the Battle of New Market Heights (Chaffin's Farm); 14 Blacks receive the Medal of Honor.
1865	January 16	South Carolina	In Special Field Orders No. 15, Union general William T. Sherman temporarily sets aside 80,000 acres along the coast of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida to be rented or purchased by 18,000 Black families and promises to loan them surplus army horses and mules to work this land; Andrew Johnson later rescinds the order, returning the land to its original owners.
1865	March 3	Washington, D.C.	Bureau of Refugees, Freedmen, and Abandoned Lands (Freedmen's Bureau) is established.

DOCUMENT A

Source: Major General Benjamin F. Butler, report to the secretary of war, July 30, 1861.

In the village of Hampton there were a large number of Negroes, composed in a great measure of women and children who had fled thither within my lines for protection, who had escaped from marauding Rebels who had been gathering up able-bodied blacks to aid them in constructing their batteries on the James and York rivers . . .

First, what shall be done with them? Second, what is their state and condition? Upon these questions I desire the instruction of the department.

. . . Are these men, women, and children slaves? Are they free? Is their condition that of men, women, and children, or of property, or is it a mixed relation? What has been the effect of rebellion and a state of war on their status? When I adopted the theory of treating the able-bodied Negro fit to work in the trenches as property liable to be used in aid of rebellion, and so contraband of war, that condition of things was insofar met, as I then and still believe, on a legal and constitutional basis.

Document Summary:

Early in the Civil War, Union general Benjamin Butler wrote to Secretary of War Simon Cameron on the chaotic conditions he found in Virginia. Butler reported that many desperate enslaved African Americans sought protection from Confederates who wanted to force them to build river fortifications. These freedom seekers forced Butler and the Lincoln administration to decide whether fugitive slaves entering Union lines would be returned to their “owners” in accordance with the law or taken into custody, with the government assuming a degree of responsibility for their welfare. Butler’s own answer was that these freedom seekers were “contraband of war” who could serve the Union army in useful capacities, such as digging trenches. This document thus points to the pressure that Union forces faced in handling the many escaped slaves who came their way and the temptation to make strategic use of this suddenly available labor source. Other Union generals would have similar questions about freedom seekers and would handle the question of enslavement to their advantage, at least until President Abraham Lincoln made abundantly clear who held the powers of commander-in-chief.

Document Information:

- Slaves had fled to Union lines.
- There is no Union policy on fleeing slaves.
- Butler advances his theory on contraband of war.
- Union army is using fugitive slave labor.

Document Inferences:

- Many slaves fled the slave-holding South as Union troops approached.
- Enslaved African men, women, and children’s actions were compelling the federal government to confront slavery.
- Foreshadows Lincoln’s Emancipation Proclamation.

Source: Resolution of African Americans in Newtown, New York, August 20, 1862.

We, THE COLORED CITIZENS of Queens County, N.Y., having met in mass meeting . . . to consider the speech of Abraham Lincoln, . . . [wish] to express our views on the subject of being colonized in Central America or some other country. . . .

While bleeding and struggling for her life against slaveholding traitors, and, at this very time, when our country is struggling for life and 1 million freemen are believed to be scarcely sufficient to meet the foe, we are called upon by the President of the United States to leave this land and go to another country, to carry out his favorite scheme of colonization. But at this crisis, we feel disposed to refuse the offers of the President, since the call of our suffering country is too loud and imperative to be unheeded.

Document Summary:

A group of African Americans met during the Civil War to consider President Abraham Lincoln's proposal for Black resettlement in a foreign land, particularly the Caribbean or Latin America. These "colored citizens" from New York dismissed the idea of colonization out of hand. The burden of fighting all-out war, this group observed, was so great that even a million White soldiers might not carry the day. Under such trying circumstances, the very idea of removing Black citizens through colonization was unthinkable. This letter did not persuade the president. Although Lincoln did not think colonizing millions of African Americans was possible, he remained convinced that the profound differences between the White and Black races made such resettlement desirable.

Document Information:

- There are one million free Black American citizens.
- There was a mass meeting of African Americans to rebut President Lincoln's call for colonization of Blacks in Central America.

Document Inferences:

- African Americans wished to serve in the military.
- The Union was going to have to pursue some other solution to race besides colonization.
- Lincoln rejected a truly multicultural society.
- Free Blacks were loyal, contributing citizens; colonization wasted contributions from Black citizens.

DOCUMENT C

Source: Abraham Lincoln, a published letter, August 26, 1863.

There are those who are dissatisfied with me . . . to be plain, you are dissatisfied with me about the negro. Quite likely there is a difference of opinion between you and myself upon that subject. I certainly wish that all men could be free, while I suppose you do not. . . . You say you will not fight to free negroes. Some of them seem willing to fight for you; but, no matter . . . negroes, like other people, act upon motives. Why should they do anything for us, if we will do nothing for them? If they stake their lives for us, they must be prompted by the strongest motive—even the promise of freedom. And the promise being made, must be kept.

Document Summary:

Here, President Abraham Lincoln responded to a White letter-writer, apparently from the North, who opposed equality for African Americans. While Lincoln realized his racial views were not universally popular, he wondered why the letter-writer would not support freedom for African Americans when they had expressed a willingness to fight for Whites in the Civil War. In any case, Lincoln observed that freedom had been promised to African Americans and that he intended to honor that commitment. Less than a month after this letter appeared, Lincoln issued a carefully worded proclamation declaring the freedom of enslaved Africans in Confederate territory.

Document Information:

- Lincoln has decided what to do about slavery.
- Lincoln intends to free the slaves.
- Lincoln's views on slavery are controversial.
- Lincoln intends to remain steadfast in his plans for emancipation.

Document Inferences:

- Lincoln's views on slavery were evolving.
- Black soldiers were fighting for the Union and their own freedom, e.g., Fort Wagner.
- Confederates did not follow the rules of war in treating Black soldiers.
- The Civil War will recast the American South.
- Lincoln recognized qualities in African Americans that he had not previously recognized.

Source: Republican Party platform, 1864.

. . . 3. Resolved, That as slavery was the cause, and now constitutes the strength of this Rebellion . . . justice and the National safety demand its utter and complete extirpation from the soil of the Republic; and that, while we uphold and maintain the acts and proclamations by which the Government, in its own defense, has aimed a deathblow at this gigantic evil, we are in favor, furthermore, of such an amendment to the Constitution . . . [that] shall terminate and forever prohibit the existence of Slavery

7. Resolved, That the Government owes to all men employed in its armies, without regard to the distinction of color, the full protection of the laws of war . . .

Document Summary:

In its reelection platform, the Republican Party—the party of freedom—blamed slavery for causing the Civil War and sustaining the Confederate war effort. With the stakes so high, Republicans urged passage of a constitutional amendment to abolish slavery permanently. The Republican Party had come some distance in its thinking about slavery since its previous platform had been promulgated. In 1860 the Republicans believed that slavery would gradually die out if it was kept from spreading like cancer to the territories; in 1864 the Republicans could no longer tolerate human bondage and sought to end it everywhere with a single stroke of the constitutional pen. Another objective of the 1864 Republican platform was to afford all races who fought for the Union every available protection, an apparent reference to African American troops who were sometimes mutilated or massacred in combat.

Document Information:

- Republican Party identifies slavery as the cause of the Civil War.
- Republican Party calls for the elimination of slavery.

Document Inferences:

- Fundamental shift in Republican Party’s position on slavery, i.e., no slave extension.
- African American troops were being mistreated, if not massacred.
- Democrats were responsible for the Civil War.
- Serious challenge by the Peace Democrats, i.e., George McClellan.

Source: Charlotte Forten, African American teacher in the South Carolina Sea Islands, March 1864.

I never before saw children so eager to learn, although I had had several years' experience in New England schools. Coming to school is a constant delight and recreation to them. They come here as other children go to play. The older ones, during the summer, work in the fields from early morning until eleven or twelve o'clock, and then come to school, after their hard toil in the hot sun, as bright and as anxious to learn as ever.

. . . Many of the grown people are desirous of learning to read. It is wonderful how a people who have been so long crushed to the earth . . . can have so great a desire for knowledge, and such a capacity for attaining it.

Document Summary:

Charlotte Forten, who came from a prominent abolitionist family in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was the first northern Black teacher to instruct former slaves in the South in 1862. In what was later called the Port Royal Experiment on St. Helena Island, South Carolina, the cultured, idealistic, and driven 24-year-old Forten was amazed by the hunger for learning that African American children and adults exhibited. Their thirst for an education was not slowed by youthful distractions, grueling field work under a hot sun, or a lifetime of oppression. Forten stayed on the island for 18 months, hoping she would form a bond with her students, but her precarious health broke first. In truth, Forten's upbringing, education, and temperament gave her more in common with White teachers who worked alongside her than with her unsophisticated and unlettered students, whose first language was Gullah. Forten later wrote about her memorable experience in a series of essays entitled "Life on the Sea Islands" that appeared in the Atlantic Monthly.

Document Information:

- New England women, including African Americans, went to the South to teach formerly enslaved African children how to read.
- African Americans of all ages were eager to learn.

Document Inferences:

- African American northerners contributed to the African American community generally.
- The initial optimism of the Port Royal Experiment would turn sour, eliciting fierce White opposition.
- African Americans tried to dismiss the myths of slavery.

Source: The New York Times, March 7, 1864.

There has been no more striking manifestation of the marvelous times that are upon us than the scene in our streets at the departure of the first of our colored regiments.

Eight months ago the African race in this City were literally hunted down like wild beasts. They fled for their lives. When caught, they were shot down in cold blood, or stoned to death, or hung to the trees or the lamp-posts. Their houses were pillaged; the asylum which Christian charity had provided for their orphaned children was burned . . .

How astonishingly has all this been changed! The same [African American] men . . . now march in solid platoons, with shouldered muskets, slung knapsacks, and buckled cartridge-boxes down through our gayest avenues and our busiest thoroughfares to the pealing strains of martial music, and are everywhere saluted with waving handkerchiefs, with descending flowers, and with the acclamations and plaudits of countless beholders.

It is only by such occasions that we can at all realize the prodigious revolution which the public mind everywhere is experiencing. Such developments are infallible tokens of a new epoch.

Document Summary:

This article/editorial marvels at the rapid acceptance that African Americans received in New York City during the Civil War. In July 1863, after a military draft was announced to support the Union effort to crush the Confederate rebellion, White urban residents, particularly Irish Americans, went on a racist rampage to kill any Black person they encountered. To many Whites, not only were Blacks the main reason the war was being fought, but they were stealing blue-collar jobs away from White workers. Eight months later, however, Black troops, looking smart in their new uniforms and with their erect military posture, were greeted by admiring crowds of White well-wishers. Such a dramatic change in attitude in such a short time, the newspaper wrote, offered indisputable proof of a social revolution.

Document Information:

- White society's views about Blacks had changed.
- Racial violence over the war.
- African American troops.

Document Inferences:

- The Civil War was now for social change.
- African Americans were greatly appreciated.
- African American military service promoted this change.
- Blacks were willing to fight in the war despite mistreatment/riots.
- The Union would win, and winning meant defining the society.

We claim, then, as citizens of this State, the laws of the Commonwealth shall give to all men equal protection; that each and every man may appeal to the law for his equal rights without regard to the color of his skin; and we believe this can only be done by extending to us the elective franchise, which we believe to be our inalienable right as freemen, and which the Declaration of Independence guarantees to all free citizens of this Government and which is the privilege of the nation. We claim the right of suffrage . . .

Document Summary:

Meeting a few months after the Civil War ended, African Americans in Virginia made an impassioned plea for suffrage. This inalienable right, the convention maintained, is guaranteed to all free men, including Black men, through the Declaration of Independence. This limited excerpt does not include some important elements of the document, including that the delegates were former slaves whose great fear was that former Confederates were recovering their citizenship rights before African Americans ever got theirs. Maintaining that ex-Confederates possessed a loyalty that was no more than “lip deep,” the Black delegates warned of their vulnerability in being “sheep in the midst of wolves.” Only the armed might of the United States government, the former slaves insisted, prevented Blacks from being driven from the land they had lived and worked on all their lives. Ultimately, Black pressure from such groups as this one in Alexandria, helped win ratification of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments to the United States Constitution, guaranteeing equal protection before the law and Black male suffrage.

Before me came Rebecca Parsons—a freedwoman . . . she was . . . a Slave of T. A. Parsons . . . she has four children now in possession of said Parsons. That when she was freed she informed said Parsons that she was going to her kindred. . . . He told her that she might go but her children belonged to Him & she could not have them . . . she found a home . . . & in February last she went to Parsons & demanded her children—Parsons told her “they were bound to him and that she should not have them unless she paid Him four thousand dollars.” . . . she was thus compelled to return without them—And she left them crying to go with Her.

Document Summary:

Rebecca Parsons, who had been enslaved by T. A. Parsons, declared her intention to leave his plantation and live with her extended family. The planter consented—he had no other choice, given the Thirteenth Amendment—but demanded that Rebecca pay him $4,000 to recover her children. She did not have such a large sum and so departed alone, with her children wailing as she left. When the civil war began in 1961, it began for many political reasons, all of which were affected by the question of slavery, but not ^{entirely} ~~wholly~~ concentrated on. Although we have been taught that Lincoln and the North fought for freedom from the start, this was not so. Most fought to preserve the union, while the south fought to preserve what they believed to be inalienable state rights. However, the eager and willing compliance of African Americans ^{throughout} ~~at~~ the civil war led to a significant alteration in the goals of the war, and therefor a later contribution to the new culture and politics that followed.

Major Butler presents the question that many must have asked at the time ^{regarding fugitive slaves;} "are they free?", and if so, "what do I do with them?" (source A). At the onset of the war, when slavery was not the central issue, but merely the flame which kindled the fighting, the question of what to do with fugitive slaves was a large one. Many adopted these slaves to work in the war as servants, cooks, and soldiers. As the union began to realize the usefulness of these slaves, the course of the war began to shift. Upon realizing the heart and dedication of such African Americans who refused to leave this land "in favor of heeding "the call of our suffering country", the North decided to make the abolition of slavery a primary goal of the war (Doc. B). By thrusting themselves into the war effort, these African Americans changed a war based on political disagreements and state power into a war to "terminate and forever prohibit" slavery (Doc. D).

This change was primarily apparent when Lincoln announced the Emancipation Proclamation. While this statement only freed slaves in areas of rebellion, it demonstrated a shifted purpose, and a moral side of the war that had not been readily apparent before. Where Lincoln had previously taken the stance of neutrality, "if I could end this war by freeing the slaves, I would ~~do so~~ ^{the eagerness} of blacks to "stake their lives for us" persuaded him to make the promise of freedom (Doc. C). Therefore, the willing participation of blacks in the Civil War with the hopes of achieving freedom caused an entirely new course to form for the Union.

As a consequence, the outcome of the Civil War differed from what had previously been anticipated. Where originally, the reforming of the USA ^{and evaluation on the question} ~~was~~ ^{of slavery in the new territories (popular sovereignty or not?)} was a primary concern, now the government was faced with the issue of appealing an angry South. According to the Republican Party Platform of 1864, the creation of the 13th amendment was inevitable and necessary. If the African Americans had not pushed so hard, this would not have been so. The addition of the 14th and 15th amendments ^{and citizenship} granting the right of suffrage ^{demand} demanded by the convention of colored people only further aggravated the war to the South (Doc. H). As a result, the government was forced to focus the majority of Johnson's presidency on Reconstruction. Blacks were avid supporters of reconstruction, as shown by their extremely instrumental involvement in ^{constitutional} conventions (Doc J).

Although grandfather clauses and poll taxes eventually curtailed this involvement, blacks were able to gain full citizenship and suffrage; feats that would have been impossible had they not so dramatically altered the course and outcome of the war.

African American also shaped major social changes in the years that followed the civil war. Not dissuaded by southern harassment, many joined colored regiments or obtained other jobs (Doc F). Where they had previously been kept illiterate, African Americans now attended schools, showing a startling eagerness to obtain knowledge. (Doc E). Racial tensions lessened in the North, where a greater realization that color doesn't matter arose, as demonstrated in Nat's political cartoon of Lady Liberty and a black soldier. ~~These~~ ^{This} participation in the military and education helped to shape a more tolerant and integrated society in postbellum America.

African Americans' involvement during the civil war helped to shift to a ^{greater focus} on freedom which led to more political and social changes as the war drew to a close. Without this involvement, America would not be as it is today; an embodiment of the inalienable rights granted to us by the U.S. constitution.

African-Americans and the Civil War

During the Antebellum era, the United States experienced a gradually intensifying sectional conflict that threatened the unity of the nation. The Civil War was a result of the North-South conflict over a number of policies and issues, but most importantly, the status of African-Americans. Compromises between the two sides had become futile, and a full-fledged civil war erupted in 1861. The debate over slavery shaped the course of the Civil War by acting as a catalyst for the fighting, and the status of African-Americans profoundly affected the issues of Reconstruction in the South after the war.

As the Civil War progressed, the Union's policies regarding the fate of black slaves began to experience a 180-degree turn. In the 1860 Republican presidential campaign, none of the parties took a strong stand for the abolition of slavery, and Lincoln only advocated free soil in new territories. However, with the Union victory at the Battle of Antietam a few years into the war, his stance toward slavery changed drastically in issuing the Emancipation Proclamation. In one of his letters written in 1863, he also stated, "why should [Negroes] do anything for us, if we will do nothing for them? ... the promise of freedom must be kept." This statement shows a change in Lincoln's policies and goals, driven by the desire to enlist black aid in fighting to preserve the Union. As a result of this, freed blacks were encouraged to enlist in the Union army, "now marching in solid platoons" and "saluted with waving handkerchiefs", a departure from their previous treatment as slaves and "wild beasts" (doc. F). This represents a great improvement in the identity of blacks during the course of the Civil War, after being emancipated, and their addition into the fight against the Confederacy were of a great asset to the Union. At the same time, they were able to enjoy unprecedented civil rights as outlined in the Republican Party platform of 1862. Upon the Confederacy's defeat in the Civil War, the fate of African-Americans raised problems and changed the goals of Reconstruction in the South. Although the black slaves were freed in the 13th Amendment, ^{it did not answer} General Benjamin Butler's ~~unimpaired~~ ^{complex} question regarding "the effect of rebellion and a state of war on their status" (Doc. A). Freed slaves were still subject to discrimination, ~~discrimination~~ and ~~their owner's refusal to free them~~, as seen in Rebecca Parson's attempt to demand the freedom of her enslaved children (Doc. I). ~~The~~ The 15th Amendment also proved to be ineffective in ending racial discrimination in the South. Blacks advocated "equal rights without regard to the color of skin" but they were still restricted from voting in most of the Southern states, especially North Carolina and Texas (Doc. J). Reconstruction raised a number of controversies regarding the rights of former slaves, ^{also} marking this time period an era of stalemate between the President and Congress. Andrew Johnson's ^{ment} ~~impeachment~~ resulting from his dispute with ~~some~~ radical Republicans over Reconstruction reflected the tensions ~~in~~ within the national government after the Civil War. The onset of the Civil War raised many questions for the northerners whom were seeking to preserve the Union. Many of these questions related to the burdening issue of slavery. While the preservation of the nation was the main objective of the war, an equally important aspect was to end slavery and liberate African Americans. Was the fight for freedom worth the bloodshed and loss? This is the question many Northerners found themselves asking. At the end of the Civil War many realized that the price paid was indeed worth it. Yet sadly many of these expected liberties that African-American expected to gain were not yet given them.

In regards to the African American, a large question mark was looming over the North. Who were these slaves that we were beginning a Civil War in order to liberate? Even noted authorities such as secretary of war Benjamin F. Butler questioned whether they were human or simply property.
(D-A) This reveals that considerably little

The voice of African American was an important and useful element -- if only it were listened to more often. Yet many African Americans were able to stay in their homeland desired land in this case.

2009 SCORING COMMENTARY (Form B)

Question 1

Sample: 1A

Score: 8

This well-crafted essay voices a clear thesis in the opening paragraph that actions taken by African Americans altered the course of the Civil War and helped form the culture and politics of the postwar period. The essay skillfully utilizes information from eight documents to support the contention that Blacks were active agents in their emancipation and attempted integration into mainstream American life. This effort is buttressed by a sizable portion of relevant outside information (states' rights, popular sovereignty, Andrew Johnson, Thirteenth to Fifteenth amendments, poll taxes, grandfather clauses) and a generous serving of analysis regarding the ways African Americans affected the period. The essay's misunderstanding of the Nast cartoon (Document G) and the realities of post-Civil War race relations prevented it from receiving the highest score.

Sample: 1B

Score: 5

This essay has a two-part thesis, arguing that “[t]he debate over slavery shaped the course of the Civil War” and that “the status of African-Americans profoundly affected the goals of Reconstruction.” The thesis and analysis are only partially developed because they focus on African Americans as objects of debate rather than as actors. The essay contains substantial outside information, but again it tends to focus on the political history of the Civil War, for example, citing the Union victory at Antietam as allowing the Emancipation Proclamation. It discusses a majority of the documents adequately, for example, using Document I to highlight continued discrimination following the war. The essay slightly misreads other documents, such as equating the Republican Party platform (Document D) with actual policies. The writing and organization are acceptable.

Sample: 1C

Score: 3

This essay has an undeveloped thesis that is mainly descriptive. It uses most documents but in an almost laundry list approach, and there is an error in the use of Document A. It contains a fair amount of outside information, but some pieces are outside the time frame, for example, Uncle Tom's Cabin. Although fairly well organized and written, the analysis is simplistic at best and kept this essay from the top of the 2–4 score category.
